

1991

Playing practical jokes on the Physics Teacher

It was a rainy afternoon down in the basement of Gammel Kongevej where the Physics lab used to be. A few students had gathered for a lesson (exactly when and who I am afraid I don't remember, I think Tara Saunders was one of the students). A few minutes after we had started a boy - tall, handsome, curly hair - asked me if I had a napkin to give him. I said yes and went to my coat that was thrown over one of the benches in the lab. I put my hand in the pocket and I came up with a very sexy black lacy bra and matching panties. The students, who were prepared and watching the scene very carefully, burst out laughing and the boy who had asked for the napkin looked at me with a big grin and an expression of astonishment. I admit it took more than a few microseconds to realize the joke played on me, just as I realized that it would have been foolish to pretend to come up with a plausible excuse!

Andreas Tsokos